Hi All,

I wanted to follow up our discussion yesterday on the substrate behind the new kitchen hood. I have attached the associated NFPA 96 reference passages with the appropriate sections highlighted as well as a cut sheet of the specified ceiling tile. We will be replacing the wood furring wall behind the hood with a new metal stud wall with 5/8" type X moisture resistant gypsum wall board. This wall will be classified as a limited combustibile wall, which requires the 3" hood standoff which is included in the hood design. The hood will be more than 18" from the existing combustibile wood frames rafters, and the new ceiling will stop before the hood and is also listed as Fire Class A/FireGuard material. Please see the updated diagram below for reference.

Please let me know if you have any questions, but I think this clears up the remaining hood issues?

Best,

Jocelyn
