Sorry it has to be fully enclosed with doors. From the second floor deck to the third floor deck.

I have never seen an enclosed tunnel stairwell with a door. That's foolish Matt so no we are not putting doors on an outside stairwell.

This has already taken 10X's longer than it should and cost me thousands of dollars. Enclose the stairwell with a roof and siding and lets get this over with.

Matt,

With regard to the plans, A4 seems to indicate that only the portion of the stairs after the turn will have sides. Is that correct? All stairs above the first floor need to be enclosed, including the longer flight that runs from the second floor deck to the turn.

Are there going to be doors at each end to get into the stairwell, so that it is fully enclosed? Or were you trying to just have it open on the ends, like a tunnel?

Thanks,
Chris

That sounds good. Once I have the plans I should be able to sign off for zoning. Then it needs to be looked at by another reviewer to ensure it meets building code requirements.

There is one other piece in all this that I think I have neglected to tell you about. Adding a new dwelling unit also needs Administrative Authorization approval from our planning dept. This is a very simple approval and is usually done within a week or two. You just need to fill out this form and attach your plot plan and e-mail it to planning@portlandmaine.gov. If you can get it to them quickly it should be completed while we finish the building permit review. I apologize for forgetting to tell you about this before.

I will wait for the updated plans.

Thanks,
Chris

Thanks. You and I have spoken about the "after the fact" stuff and I believe Matt had those drawn in. Those are indeed far enough away from abutting properties which is great. MATT IF YOU DONT KNOW EXACTLY WHAT SHE NEEDS FOR THE EXISTING DECK THAT THE PREVIOUS OWNER BUILT PLEASE ADVISE.

Matt can update the drawing showing siding to the stairs for you and send that back. Once he sends that how long until we get approval?

Michael,

I have done a thorough research of the property and discussed the situation with Ann.

First, I cannot find any record that the existing rear deck/stair system was ever permitted by the city, and it does not appear on the pre-1957 tax card to be considered grandfathered. I suspect a prior owner constructed it without approval. To resolve this, I would recommend e-mailing me a request for "after-the-fact" approval of these on your pending permit. The structures must meet the setbacks of 10 feet from the rear line and 5 feet from side property lines. Based on your existing plot plan, it appears that the structures meet these setbacks, but please confirm.

As far as the zoning enclosure requirement, it is our interpretation that the new staircase that will run from the 2nd floor to the new top deck must be entirely enclosed with walls & roof, but that you could have an open deck from the stairs to the door. So if you want to revise the plans to depict this, please e-mail them to me and I will move forward. After that, the application will be reviewed for life safety and building code compliance. The plans must meet those codes. If the reviewers for those two codes have questions/concerns they will contact you directly.

Please let me know if you have any further questions.

Best,
Chris

While you're talking with Ann check on the "no open outside stairways" please. My interpretation is not being open means that it has to be enclosed like every other exterior multi unit stairwell in Portland is. It needs a railing. It needs to be safe so you can't walk off of the edge so it is enclosed. To be enclosed and have walls is absurd.

I went around to all types of 2+ family units, a lot of which were constructed not long ago, metal fire escapes and wood, and none have roofs and none are walled. They have safe railing systems which is normal. They aren't walled.

Thanks for your help

I read 2.b. saying "No open stairways or fire escapes shall be constructed". So that would mean that Matt will enclose the new stairwell we have been trying to get approved for the past 6 months. Why would he enclose any portion of a deck that is not part of the stairwell?

The stairwell (the entire stairwell) will be enclosed. I don't see any verbiage saying the exterior stairwell to the doorway should be enclosed. It only says "enclosed stairway".

Is this Ann's personal opinion to enclose the stairwell up to the door or is it written in another document that I should read?

This has been the interpretation of the city zoning department as long as this rule has existed, according to my supervisor Ann Machado. The opposite of an open structure would be enclosed, and enclosed means having walls around it. She also told me (and I believe I explained this to you in one of our phone conversations) that it must be enclosed up to the doorway into the apartment, i.e. having an enclosed stairway to an open deck from which the apartment is accessed would not meet her understanding of the rule.

I am happy to look at revised plans when you send them. However the plans also need to be approved for building codes before any permit can be issued.

Strange 99% of new and old fire escapes and exterior stairwells in Portland which are multi units all don't have walls and they only have railings. So you interpret the word "open" to being "must have walls"? Is that a common interpretation around the world or just your personal interpretation?

Matt, can you draw a line on the side of the stairwell drawing and that send back to Chris today?

Chris once he sends this back can you put a stamp on it within 1 minute since this is the only issue you have? (I'm hoping)

Michael,

The section you appealed is Sec 14-136(a)(2)(b) which states that for multi-family dwellings "No open outside stairways or fire escapes above the ground floor shall be constructed." See attached. Our interpretation is that a covered stairway is still considered an "open" stairway which is prohibited. The stairway and entry into the building must be enclosed by walls.

Matt can you reply please?

From my notes Christina - I've gone over this code many of times having to go in front of the planning board of appeals. I don't have the exact words in front of me, but it is something like "all multi family buildings must have exterior fire escapes and stairwells covered". It does not talk about siding at all or electrical lighting being installed.

It only says that they must be covered / roofed. If I'm confused please send me the correct verbiage again and I can look it over. The drawings sent 6 weeks ago and last week looked completely covered to me though on the exterior stairwell.

All applications must show right, title & interest for the proposed work. The owner information on your application does not match what is on the assessor's information for ownership of this property. Right, title & interest can be proven in a number of ways; providing documentation showing the changing of ownership (usually by providing a copy of the first page of the purchase and sales agreement, if this is a lease, then a copy of the lease showing they have right, title, and interest to do the work performed, or a letter or note expressing approval from the owner.
